COVID Care at Home

Wherever you live, whatever your health conditions and whatever your vaccination status, you will be cared for.

If you have COVID-19 you must isolate at home until you are told you can leave. This will help stop the spread to other people. Everyone in your household will need to isolate at home too.

Most people with COVID-19 who are fully vaccinated (two doses) will only get mild symptoms and can be cared for at home. Most people will be treated over the phone by their health worker or doctor. They will monitor your health and recovery while you're at home. Other people will receive virtual care from a hospital.

Everyone will receive:

Phone calls

or

Video calls

You will be asked to monitor and record your daily symptoms

Home visits

You might need to be admitted to hospital if your symptoms get worse.

Even if your symptoms are mild, you might need to go to hospital if:

- you have a chronic health condition or a disability and need extra support
- it's hard to isolate safely from others in your home
- you live a long way from a hospital and you're older.

If your symptoms are mild but you can't isolate safely at home, you might be provided temporary accommodation where you can recover.
